

Summary

This bachelor thesis named „Migration and islamism in current Czech republic: religious and theological reflection“ maps current perceptions of the immigration issue of Muslim migrants. It reflects migration in today's situation in the Czech republic. Based on theologic reflection the thesis shows attitudes that are consistent with christian concept of immigration. It deals with Islamic religion and its radical sectors, which influence the view of the Czech society on Muslims. The thesis is based on the biblical view of the Old and the New Testaments of foreigners and tries to compare this view with the current attitudes of some Czech Churches. The end of the thesis defines the christian perception of hospitality, the role of the churches and their contribution to society in the issue of immigration.
