

Abstract

Due to the trend of still high rate of divorce cooperation between professionals offers possible tools which can lead to a more efficient and accelerated divorce process. This diploma thesis deals with the cooperation of interested professionals in divorce proceedings in selected European countries (German Cochem practise, practice from the United Kingdom and Slovakia). The theoretical part characterizes the current situation of the family, the role of professionals in our country and deals with the effects of divorce on children. The empirical part describes using qualitative research, method of documentary analysis and based on established criteria comparison of guardianship practices in the mentioned countries.

This diploma thesis brings a view of the cooperation of interested professionals from abroad and points out the ways of cooperation, which can bring positive changes to the process of guardianship, which will lead to a de-sparring of the dispute. This will falicitate traumatized children, their parents and busy professionals.