

This paper introduces at first the inception of feminism in the society and later in Denmark. Then it presents feminist literary theory and the motives which the theory pursues. In the second part the paper analyses three Karen Blixen's tales and compares them to Sigrid Undset's novel. At this comparison it endeavours to point to a difference of the authors and to a Blixen's unique perspective on female status in society through her work.