

The rigorous thesis deals with housing policy of municipalities of the Czech Republic focusing on social housing. It evaluates attitudes to the housing policy of other European countries and describes present situation in post-socialist states in the frame of housing policy and social housing. The thesis also describes development and structure of municipal housing resources in the Czech Republic that can be used for social housing policy realization. Analysis of development and structure of the municipal housing resources is based on the secondary data analysis. The opinion of local government representatives to role of municipalities in the housing policy was mapped by the qualitative research to create the interpretation context of the quantitative analysis.