

This master's thesis focuses on analysing the way the relationship between man and his environment is constituted (his identification with the environment, the origins of the identification, how the environment is defined and valued). It is based on the research carried out in Černošín, the town in Tachov region, which was populated by new inhabitants after WW2.