

This diploma thesis considers the gender overtones, implications and messages in media production, which could lead to the (re)production of gender inequalities. Gender analysis of media production is able to undermine the presumption of media neutrality and neutrality of documentary work as a genre. This thesis is based on a study of concrete documentary work „Marriage Studies Twenty Years Later“.