ABSTRACT

Background: The nightlife environment is a frequent place of the sexual violence. It happens mainly because of the atmosphere and environment in the clubs, which are sexualized and characterized by alcohol consumption or other psychoactive substances. In the Czech Republic, nobody has been systematically involved in the prevention of sexual violence by this time. Since the end of 2017, the Department of Addictology has become a partner of the project Stop-SV - Stop Sexual Violence, which is dedicated to staff training in the clubs.

Aims: The primary aim is to evaluate the training program by the club staff who attended the Stop-SV training.

Methodology: The thesis is based on qualitative research methodology. Respondents were selected as simple random sampling. The selection criterion was the condition of participation in the Stop-SV training as the club staff. The research sample consisted of 11 respondents - 5 women and 6 men, 28 years of average age and on the positions as bar staff, security, managers, nightlife service worker, DJ, photographer. The data were analyzed using open and axial coding methods of the grounded theory.

Results: The results are divided into three categories that correspond to research questions - evaluation of methodology and lecturers, evaluation of use in their own practice, attitude expression. The training Stop-SV was perceived positively by respondents. In the interview, many respondents said that they are more sensitive and responsive to the topic of sexual violence after Stop-SV training. Respondents appreciated about training the complex concept of the sexual violence problematic, theoretical background and interactive approach. The most common element missing in the training to participants was practical examples of solutions (model situations). Some respondents said that they haven't encountered the sexual violence in their practice yet, but they feel that they are enriched with knowledge and strengthened by self-confidence to deal with forms of sexual violence.

Conclusions: Based on the obtained data and the results, the recommendation has been compiled which can help as a methodological inspiration and improvement of the training methodology.
