Abstract in English:

This thesis is separated into two main parts where the first one is concerned with Russian history in the years 1914-1920, starting with the causes of the situation. Afterward, it is also interested in the personality of Jan Syrový and his work at the so-called Siberian Anabasis in 1914-1920, during the First World War, the civil war in Russia and his move to the port in Vladivostok and return to Czechoslovakia. Along with the Raw character, he also addresses the views and views of his colleagues, peers, and others who have come into contact with him. Archived materials (magazines, letters) and also more lately literature served as the main sources. For a better idea of the time, the responses in the press were used.
