

Abstract

Title: Aggressive behaviour of the SK Slavia Prague football fans

Objectives: To find out, what are the specific features of the aggressive Slavia Prague fans and evaluate the consequences of their behaviour for the participants of football games.

Methods: In this work, a quantitative method of a survey questionnaire was used. Electronic questioning was chosen as a specific method. The questionnaire was intended only for Slavia fans and its goal was to find out what kinds of aggressive behaviour they were showing and whether they felt their effects. The questionnaire was distributed through fan groups, as well as the official and unofficial sites of the club on Facebook. The results were analyzed by processing the answers into graphs and tables using absolute and relative frequencies, or their comparison in the sample files with the basic file.

Results: The assumption that aggressive fans belong mostly to lower social groups has been confirmed. The consequences for the participants of football games are not very serious, but it is necessary to constantly try to identify delinquent fans in order to further eliminate the spectators' aggression at the stadiums.
