

Abstract

Title: Attitudes to american football at the Faculty of Physical Education and Sport, Charles University

Objectives: The focus of this bachelors thesis is to find out what are the attitudes of the students of Faculty of physical education and sport of Charles University to American football and also find out what knowledge students possess about this sport.

Methods: In this work is used the method of quantitative questioning through questionnaire survey of students and graduates of the Faculty of Physical Education and Sport of Charles University. Questionnaire was distributed in electronic form and was created exclusively for the purposes of this thesis. The theoretical part was created and written based on studies of specialised literature.

Results: In conclusion the research helped with finding the attitudes students of Faculty of Physical Education and Sport to American football. The results are showing what knowledge do those students possess about rules of the game, posts or specific clubs and players. Some of the respondents were showing an interest in trying out this sport. Current knowledge of american football is average, however the stances are mostly positive and there is also an interest in playing this sport as well.

Keywords: attitudes, knowledge, american football, electronic questioning