

Abstract

The bachelor thesis deals with the issue of coalition governance in Poland between 2005 and 2007. It uses description methods and elements of comparative analysis. Part of the work is devoted to the Polish political system as well as the characteristics of the parties relevant to the period under review; the situation before the 2005 elections and the national elections both parliamentary and presidential; the formation of governments and the wider context of Polish politics. The theoretical part of the thesis consists of coalition theory, which is applied in the analysis to governments with the participation of the Law and Justice party.
