

This thesis aims to describe acute myocardial infarction as a psychosomatic disease. Represents acute myocardial infarction as a result of stress and type A behavior.

Research part reveals number of respondents, affected by stress at the time of myocardial infarction and respondents with type A behavior.