

Abstract

The work deals with the area of the late baroque garden which was built approximately in the middle of the 18th century at the chateau in the central Bohemian town of Smilkov, which then belonged to Count Jan Jindřich of Bissingen. The thesis focuses on a complex spatial analysis of the garden and also it attempts to reconstruct the so-called theatron as it represented a totally unique realization of its kind in our country. Attention is also paid to the wider European context of late baroque and rococo gardens as well as to the question of possible authorship of the whole complex. The work includes visualization of the possible reconstruction and detailed photographic documentation.
