The main topic of this thesis is concerned on foreign policy program of Communist Party of Bohemia and Moravia, in the context of Czech and Russian strategic interests. From this point of view, this thesis is based on an assumption, that CPBM is supports Russian interests in international relations, which jeopardize Czech strategic interests. From the point of view of this thesis is this situation problematic mainly because of influence of Russian hybrid strategy, which is mentioned in the Annual report of BIS from 2017.

This diploma thesis has two main aims in this framework. The first aim is a description of foreign policy orientation of CPBM and its development, in the context of hybrid threats. The second aim is to recognize motivations, which lead to this orientation of Communist Party.

Official political documents of CPBM are the first source, political statements of representatives of CPBM in media are the second source and semi-structured interviews with Communist Party politicians are the third source.
