

Annotation

This bachelor thesis is about the needs of a patient hospitalised in the cardiological unit of intensive care. The theory part explains the meaning of needs and covers factors which influence their fulfillment. It mentions unadaptable behaviour. It looks into some physiological and psychological needs. It doesn't forget to mention the psyche of a patient, and patients devaluation and positive evaluation. The practical part presents quantitative research in which the questionnaire method was used. The questionnaire poll group consisted of patients of the cardiological unit of intensive care in Ústí nad Labem. The information collected from the poll is presented in a form of charts and graphs and is discussed later. In the final part we find a summary of the bachelor thesis and its contribution to nursing practice.
