

Abstract

This bachelor's thesis studies the historic present in Ancient Greek and compares it with the historic present in Czech language.

In the first part of the work the most important opinions and studies on the topic are summarized. The next part consists of the close analysis of the historic presents that one can find in the 3rd book of The Histories written by Herodotus. Every single occurrence of the historic present in the 3rd book is put down into the table attached to the thesis and analyzed with respect to the morphological, semantic, syntactic and narratologic criteria.

In the second part the historic present in Czech language is described and the main differences between the Czech and Greek historic present are explained. The analysis of the occurrences in the 3rd book continues here in the analysis how the particular Greek historic presents were translated into Czech.
