

Abstract

Author: Ester Jugasová

Institution: Ústav sociálního lékařství Lékařské fakulty v Hradci Králové
Oddělení ošetřovatelství

Title: Student's experience in training for professional practise

Supervisor: PhDr. Mariana Štefančíková, Ph.D., Ph.D.

Number of pages: 131

Number of attachments: 3

Year of defense: 2019

Keywords: general nurse, education, nursing practise, personality of nurse, adversity, stress

The bachelor thesis deals with the nursing practice of students of the bachelor program of nursing and their experience during its completion. The theoretical part deals with the current education of nurses at universities and the content of their studies. Furthermore, the thesis focuses on the nurse's personality, communication between the patient and the nurse. The bachelor thesis also focuses on the issue of stress, its causes, reactions, describes the basic types of psychosomatic diseases that are related to excessive stress. Another issue is iatropatogenia, or harm to the patient by medical staff, which may be the result of overloading nurses. The thesis also deals with the burnout syndrome that can be affected by helping professions.

The empirical part was carried out by the qualitative method of the research. Initially, 7 research objectives were set. In addition, 3 research groups (students, nurses, mentors) were selected and interviewed with open questions. The main categories and subcategories were identified using content analysis and open coding. Subsequent triangulation searched for answers to research questions that served to meet pre-determined research objectives.