

Abstract

The bachelor's thesis aims to analyse anglicisms used in gastronomy in current Québec French of the students of Université de Montréal in Canada. The theory consists of a short chapter on the geography of Québec and its language situation. It describes the history of French in the Québec territory, the linguistic politics and the language laws. The lexicological particularities of the current Québec French are taken in consideration as well, especially with focus on the phenomena of anglicisms and language borrowings. The practical part of the thesis researches the use of carefully chosen twenty anglicisms amongst the students. The online questionnaire was answered by almost 400 students. Its results seem to be showing that in majority of the cases, the anglicisms were used more often than their French counterparts.
