

Abstract

Title: Awareness and attitudes to volleyball at a grammar school in Prague 8.

Objectives: The main aim of this work is to find out what awareness and attitudes have students of the last two years at a selected grammar school in Prague 8, as a city district with a large volleyball settlement. In addition, general knowledge of volleyball and knowledge of the rules of this sport are examined. To assume not so much interest in volleyball, the next goal is to find out what sport predominates over volleyball among student, if they are already involved in someone. One of the goals is a certain recommendation for clubs based in the given territory how to work with this issue.

Methods: For this work the main method of research was the method of quantitative, more precisely written questioning. The questionnaire created solely for this work provided data that identified interest in sport as such, about volleyball and knowledge of this sport.

Results: The results showed that most students at the selected grammar school in Prague 8 don't follow the events around volleyball very much, so they don't even know the volleyball surroundings. However, awareness of volleyball in the area is high and they know the basic rules just as well. Students maintain a positive attitude towards volleyball and, compared to other sports, this sport is very popular, although most respondents engage in other activities.
