

Abstract

This dissertation is talking about the topic: practical impact of social services on the quality of life and physical disposition of mentally diseased people. Using professional literature symptoms of the disease were processed, which are characterized by a psychosis and a disruption of the contact with the reality. A treatment and social worker's approach were described to these symptoms. In following chapters the dissertation is dedicated to social security of the patient, new methods when working with the client and also to ethics. The aim of this dissertation was to find out which impact social services have on the life of a mentally diseased person. Using interviews with social workers, questions to the given aim were answered. As a supplement to the dissertation, case studies of people with a mental disease were compiled. These case studies together with interviews are very beneficial and prove that social services are key in the life of mentally diseased person.
