

Abstract

This thesis deals with the issues of prevention and creation of civil liability specifically in relation to performance of the medical profession. The author draws attention to the most common pitfalls and risks of the medical practise and in that context seeks possibilities to avoid creation of civil liability. A separate chapter deal with providing healthcare services under specific circumstances.

The remaining part of this thesis deals with the issues of compensation of damages, respectively non-proprietary damages to health and the defence of the doctor against unjustified claims of the patient.
