

Abstract

The Bachelor's Thesis deals with the theme of comparison of the uprising in Hungary and Poland in 1956. The thesis employs methods of description and comparison. The Thesis is divided into four main parts.

The first part deals with the theory of opposition and objects that formed opposition in these countries.

Following part focuses on uprising in Polish town Poznan. It outlines political situation before uprising and its causes. This part describes course of uprising and its ending.

The third part concerns with uprising in Budapest. Analogous to the first part, the second part describes political situation in Hungary before autumn 1956. Focuses on causes of uprising, main characters and course of uprising. In the end it mentions main consequences.

Last part of the Bachelor's Thesis deals with the comparison of both uprisings – its causes, courses and endings. It sums up main points and characters and compares them.
