

This master's thesis is concerned with the relationship between non-profit organizations and regional administration, with a special emphasis on their mutual cooperation when a regional development program is being designed. Reviewing the Olomouc region, the Plzeň Region and Hradec Králové region, the research provides an overview of approaches of both the non-profit organizations and regional administration representatives to this issue, comparing them with the data obtained from the research projects carried out in the past as well as with the accessible literature.