

Abstract

The purpose of this thesis is to investigate unofficial ways that spread the ideas of right-wing-populism with focus on family, especially on mother as a primary mediator. In a background of a right-wing traditional family will be researched the psychological strategies, that populists use to involve the family through the children. One of those strategies are ideologically based summer camps, that raise the political and social thinking, that the children brought from their families. The impact of those strategies will be theoretically and practically analysed.

Keywords

right-wing populism, family influence, prejudices, education of children, role of a woman, closed societies