The bachelor's thesis focuses on the issue of home health care agencies in terms of awareness of the general public. The theoretical part of the work includes the history of home care and its development in our country and abroad, the needs of patients and a holistic concept of man as a whole, the issue of late age with respect to this service and the influence of the client's home environment during illness. The practical part focuses on a questionnaire survey of the general public. The aim of the work was to find out and verify what information, experience and knowledge about home health care agencies are owned by the general public.
