The administration of Prague`s waterworks was one part of the citie`s main administration. It was organized into three parts, which had their own agenda. The parts were: the Executive council of the public waterworks, the Waterworks office XIII and the Office of the public waterworks and the 11th department (Waterworks authority).

In general, the administration and offices was bound to the imperial era, which had ended by the first world war. The roots of the republic`s offices laid in the year 1888, when the Executive council of the public waterworks and the Water office was found. In year 1889 was found the Waterworks office XIII and the Office of the public waterworks but its agenda was unknown. The Water office was transformed into the 5th department in year 1904 and finally in year 1922 into the 11th department (Waterworks authority).

The Executive council of the public waterworks was the main administration center of prague`s waterworks or I think so. It is hard to tell where the truth lay because there is no documents which demostrate the real situation in the administration. But the clues says that the Executive council of the public waterworks was the administration`s head. Its members were voted in the elections and they were also members of the citie`s council. In my opinion the Executive council made decisions which the two others offices carried out.

The Waterworks office XIII and the office of the public waterworks are spoken lesser in the documents then the other two offices. It looks like the Waterworks office XIII had had the practical abilities in the beginning of the Czechoslovakian republic but in the later years it lost them and it was transformed into advisory office of the Executive council.

The 11th department (Waterworks authority) was the office which made the everydays duties to make the waterworks functional. Its personnell suit was stable and well experted and its agenda was formulated in the same atmosphere.
