

It is the aim of this diploma thesis to comment on the distribution, referential properties and competition between the pronominals it, this and that with respect to different types of their antecedents¹ and other grammatical and discourse² factors that relate to the choice among these semantically related proforms. The above quotation illustrates a close linguistic link between the three proforms.