

This work is aimed at HIV positive people issue. The goal of this work is to describe psychological aspects of HIV positiveness according to doctors role and try to discover what services does an organization cooperating with those clients offer. The work is divided into several main chapters. The first chapter is aimed at general description of HIV (human immunodeficiency virus) and AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome). The second chapter concerns psychological aspects as already mentioned. It endeavours to describe the state of HIV positive people in daily life. Furthermore it concerns possible psychical problems connected with the disease. The third chapter considers the relationship between doctor and patient. The doctor is the one who follows the patient since the first days of his or her illness. The last chapter describes what services do organizations dealing with those clients offer. I chose Dům světla in Prague for this chapter. It provides complex variety of services which is rare in the branch of these services not only in Czech Republic. Although the number of HIV positive constantly increases all over the world they are a group standing on the edge of society and is in a way discriminated.
