

Abstract

The thesis „Gender as a factor that influences everyday interactions“ deals with human behaviour in common situations in public places. I focused on a bus as a city means of transport, especially in the places where people interact to define their personal areas. As a research method I used ethnographic semisystematic nonparticipant observation and worked with gender and age as the main factors.