

This work deals with problems of comparison shopping engines. It focuses on methods for automatic data extraction from web pages and methods for classification of the extracted data. Several algorithms for solving these problems are proposed and implemented. Also a new algorithm for automatic data extraction based on supervised machine learning techniques is proposed. Implemented methods are evaluated on a test data set and suitable parameters for the tested algorithms are found.