Thesis title: Criminal aspects of cyberbullying

Key words: cybercrime, cyberbullying, criminal law

This master thesis deals with the definition of key criminal aspects of criminal offenses referred to as cyberbullying. The master thesis is divided into five separate chapters.

The first chapter deals with the general definition of cyberbullying as a new phenomenon and its comparison with the traditional form of bullying, defines other key terms and defines the victim and perpetrators of this behavior, including these types and typology.

The second chapter introduces cyberstalking, which is compared to stalking, following the example of the first chapter, again defines and defines the basic concepts that are characteristic of this issue, as well as the perpetrator and victim, considering their patterns of behavior, typology, and motives, which lead the aggressor to commit an infringement.

The third chapter focuses on the illicit handling of personal data, which can serve as an effective tool to carry out cyberbullying, while all of them mention the institute of "freezing of data", which in turn serves as a means of prosecution and detection by law enforcement authorities to perpetrators of cyberbullying.

The fourth chapter deals with the fastest growing and at the same time the most burning issue for society of the illegal production and handling of child pornography. Emphasis is placed especially on the forms of this action, which can be implemented in cyberspace. It is therefore possible to subordinate all sexually motivated crimes committed on children and adolescents using information and communication technologies.

The final chapter then deals with dangerous threats and their new forms. That is, dangerous threats by using emoji, or dangerous threats in an online multiplayer game.
