

Abstract:

This bachelor thesis is an attempt to process the issue of so-called multicultural, i.e. ethnically mixed families in the Republic of Korea and related legislation. The first part describes the historically relatively recent phenomenon of a massive increase in marriages of Koreans with foreigners. The second part is focused on pointing out the causes of the phenomenon (economic, demographic and other) and accompanying problems (agencies business, fake marriages, cultural and linguistic assimilation, etc.). The last part presents an analysis of the response to these problems in the field of legislation and legislative changes, whether in the field of laws related to immigration policy, supporting the integration of foreigners and disadvantaged ethnic and linguistic minorities, anti-discrimination laws and combating domestic violence, etc. The aim of this analysis is to show the effectiveness of the laws and changes that have been introduced to regulate this phenomenon at present.
