

Abstract

House arrest punishment, its enforcement and control

The submitted diplom thesis aimed to analyze the legal regulation of house arrest within the Czech legal system, as an alternative punishment.

This diplom thesis contains a total of seven consecutive chapters, the first contains the definition of basic criminal law concepts that are needed to understand the issue, especially the concept of punishment, the concept of alternative measures and the system of punishments and alternative measures and principles of sentencing. Another term, which is defined in this chapter, is the concept of restorative justice, which is then widely worked on in other parts of the thesis.

In the second chapter, the diploma thesis deals specifically with the sentence of house arrest, when this topic opens the issue of the crisis of unconditional imprisonment, which is of great importance for the future application of alternative measures. The next step in the second chapter is to describe the history of house arrest, both abroad and specifically in the Czech Republic. The following is a definition of the essence of the house arrest sentence itself and the legal conditions for imposing a house arrest sentence.

A related topic is the execution of house arrest, for which a separate chapter has been set. In the chapter, which deals with the execution of house arrest, the work deals mainly with the electronic control system, the introduction of which was somewhat problematic in the Czech Republic and another subject of this chapter is the Probation and Mediation Service, which is significantly related to the execution and control of house arrest.

A separate chapter is then devoted to the individual transformations of the sentence of house arrest, especially to the nature of specific transformations. The following chapter focuses on the legal regulation of juveniles in relation to the sentence of house arrest. The last chapter deals with specific foreign regulations of the sentence of house arrest in various countries such as the USA, England and Slovakia.

The conclusion of this work is an evaluation of what the work dealt with, including the author's knowledge in the individual chapters.