

Presented thesis deals with the usage of computer simulations in management decision. Modeled environment is selected heat-distribution network, however model and its conclusions can be used for arbitrary heat

- distribution network. Model is focused on business management view of control of heat and electricity generating sources depending on power-producing market, weather and other varying parameters.