

Annotation

The goal of bachelor's thesis to analyse life quality of patients suffering with the prostate cancer. It intends on confronting two therapeutic methods and their impact to life quality of the men suffering with this disease. It's referring to the importance of education and the correct way of communication while the diagnostic and therapeutic process. The main idea is emphasizing the nursing care. The main focus of the thesis lies on a exploratory survey of life quality in men suffering with prostate cancer which is being compared to the predictions available in specialized literature. The work group was created by the patients of the urology clinic and the oncology clinic of University hospital in Hradec Králové. 74 patients were divided in two groups. 37 inmates had undergone radical prostatectomy, the others staging pelvic lymphadenectomy and subsequent irradiation. The research approved that there is no statistically significant difference of life quality in both compared respondent's groups.