

My Thesis „ Construction of programs preparing for life programs for children and adolescents growing up in children’s home“ deals with some aspects of taking care of endangered children, whose circumstances don't allow living in their own families at this moment. It is charting briefly the situation around care of children endangered in this way. It talks about functioning of this system and about its weaknesses. It points some disadvantages that complicate independent life of people grown up in institutional care compared to those who grew up in „normal“ family and it shows some specific needs of this people when they become live independently. It aspire to approach the lifes of some young people who grew up in Children's home in Sázava and they have been living few years alone already. Firstly it wants to show statistically how many of them are able to live socially functional life in noninstituoinal surrounding and on which standard. Secondly it shows concrete tales of some of these people and tries to point some interesting aspects of independent life of people who grew up in children’s home. Last but not least this thesis wants to point on some actions which could help people who leaves Children’s home Sázava to manage better the demands of society on adult people.
