

This work called The Federal Republic of Germany as an Object of the United States Foreign Policy 1949-1955 try to describe and summarize key moments of development U.S. - German relations during the period of the fifties. The aim of the work is description and analysis of basic lines US foreign policy toward Germany and political solutions for resolving of the so-called German question.

Main focus of the work is oriented on question of persistence of the US German-policy basic direction and intentions and next problems as: range of German influence on US policy making; possibility for eventual American support German unification; influence of the so-called Stalin-note, Stalin's death and Winston Churchill détente policy on US policy decision making; continuum or discontinuum of the US German-policy compared Democratic and Republican administrations; and comparing achievements and nonsuccesses of US German- and European-policy.

The German question in the 1949-1955 period is very interesting, and in light of current problems of international policy even actual topic. Germany problem was only one part of the global controversy two world political systems. Germany question was expression of failure agreement on European- and World order. But Germany thanks its economic and military potential played a key role in the US foreign policy. US policy makers consider Germany as a fundamental condition for European recovery and integration. Integrated and economically functioning Europa was one of the US main economic and security interests.
