

One of the key elements of the emancipation process of Bohemian women in 19th century was the beginning of girl's education. It represented an important role in the development of the society those days and helped to change the acceptance of the social role of women and girls.

Graduation theses is focused on the development of girl's education at the 19th century and at the beginning of the 20th century. Its aim is to cover the beginning of all types of secondary and technical schools and their specifics. Attention is also focused on beginnings of women's college education. Thesis is divided into four thematically different chapters. First one brings brief information about the emancipation process in the historical circumstances of the 19th century.

Second chapter describes education of girls in the first half of the 19th century.

Following chapter evaluates the development of the girl's education in the second half of the 19th century and contains a lot of information from this period. It brings information about Higher girl's school in Prague, educational activities of the women's clubs and also the foundation of the first Bohemian Grammar school in Prague. Last chapter is focused on situation at the 20th century until 1920 and reports about college education of women, girl's lyceums and technical schools specialized on the specific occupation as industrial ones, culinary and housewifely schools.

Graduation these is framed as a historical one. It is based on the study of contemporary sources, archive documents - e.g. annual reports, expert periodical and journals.
