

Abstract

The aim of the bachelor thesis is a linguistic comparison of modifying derivatives of nouns in Polish and Czech. The subject of my interest will be four word-forming categories, i.e. nomina feminativa, nomina deminutiva, nomina augmentativa and nomina juvenium. On the basis of the attached literature and corpuses of the Czech and Polish languages, an analysis of the process of noun formation of individual categories will be performed. The thesis will also focus on the way alternations and irregularities occur in both languages and subsequently on the frequency of modifying derivatives and the role of their occurrence in contemporary Czech and Polish languages. Overall, the work will focus on the comparison of the described processes in both languages with an emphasis on the similarities and differences between the mentioned languages.
