Course of defence: The chair invited the student to introduce the methodological and theoretical background of his thesis. The student started by explaining the primary aims and objectives of the research while developing the theoretical tenets and the methodology. Then the student also acknowledged the limitation inherent in his text and summarised the main points in relation to how they were logically structured and dealt with in the text itself. The chair carried on by raising the critical points expressed by the reviewers. The student addressed these points by developing arguments to support his approach. Subsequently, the chair invited the remaining committee members to give their comments and pose their questions to the student which were responded to by the student in detail. Finally, the defence was concluded by the chair.
