Course of defence: The committee chair invited the student to briefly introduce the principal focus of the thesis as well as the methodological and theoretical approaches. The student commenced by situating her research of nativism in the existing theoretical grasps of the problematic. She provided persuasive arguments pertaining to the relevance of the concept and distinguished her contribution to the realm of far-ideology while providing a concise description of her findings. The chair then asked the other committee members to pose their questions. The student responded to the question about the data collection process and related her research to other studies in the area. Then, she successfully addressed the question about broader empirical contextualization of her research. Dr. Karasek then asked about other possible applications of nativism in other ideological domains which were satisfactorily answered. The chair then concluded the defence by highlighting the student's valuable contribution.
