The bachelor's thesis deals with the subject of Alzheimer's disease from the perspective of family members. It focuses on how family members are cared for. The theoretical part is divided into three chapters which are about Alzheimer's disease, family load, and family dynamics. The practical part contains qualitative research. The research was carried out using a semi-structured interviews with family members. The goal was to get information on what the family members needed and how to improve communication between nursing staff and family members. The information gathered may point to what could be changed in the social facility.
