

In the research we focus on problems of self-esteem and aggress. The aim was to discover and describe if by university students an important relation between self-esteem and aggress exists, if there are some differences in self-esteem and aggress between women and men and individuals with pedagogical and non-pedagogical professional polarization. The self-esteem was followed on different levels- general, low, medium and high level as well as aggress levels. Besides general aggress we followed the relation of self-esteem towards physical aggress, verbal aggress, hostility and anger.

The results confirmed among others the presumption about relation between self-esteem and aggress, especially between self-esteem and hostility. The results of the research also subsidize the presumption about an existence of significant difference between women and men in self-esteem and aggress, they do not subsidize the presumption of difference between groups with pedagogical and non- pedagogical professional polarization in self-esteem and aggress.