

Abstract

Guide to the Obligation to Instruct in Civil Proceedings

The thesis aims to create a comprehensive guide to the court's obligation to inform participants in civil litigation. Translated work aims to familiarize the readers, regardless of their legal education, with the procedural and legal concept of informing, in accordance with the various stages of the proceedings. In the introductory part, the author presents theoretical part of the selected foundations of the civil court's obligation to inform, but most of the attention is devoted to the guide itself. In the practical chapters, the author describes the individual stages of the contentious civil proceedings, explaining the court's obligations to inform in each phase. The thesis also includes an analysis of informing during appellate and cassation proceedings. The thesis is primarily based on judicial jurisprudence, particularly that of the Constitutional Court and the Czech Supreme Court, which provides a practical insight into the contemporary understanding of the obligation to inform. In addition, the author relied on monographs, university textbooks, legal journals, and extensively utilized commentary literature as sources of information. For selected topics, the author also offers his own perspective on the issue and subjects it to critical analysis.

Key words: Court's Obligation to Inform, Civil Litigation, Right to a Fair Trial
