

This is a theoretical-analytical thesis which focuses on problematic features of the Five P Programme. On the basis of practical information received from the coordinators the thesis gives details about the current Five P situation and its most frequent problems including suggestions of their solution. In the theoretical part there are important information about volunteering, Five P programme, coordinator's activities, the law about voluntary service as well as the possibility to have the programme Five P registered as a social service. The theoretical part results in the statement of hypothesis about which problems can cause worries in the coordinators' work. In the empirical part, the thesis concentrates on problems from the coordinators' point of view, their own practical experience. All the organization running the Five P Programme in the Czech Republic were asked for cooperation on this topic. I strongly believe that my thesis The most frequent problems in the Five P Programme from the coordinators' point of view can help to improve qualitative development both the programme itself and the organizations which run it.
