

My thesis is focused on influence of primary family to life partner selection. The thesis goal is to show reader integrated overview of information regarding this topic. Theoretical part contains four main chapters focusing on family and marriage definition (or partnership), love and partner choosing. The thesis stress family importance for personality formation and for life partner selection. Definition of love is determined as well as introduction of some theories of love and life partner selection. In practical part, there is psychological research and evaluation of started goals and hypotheses based on it. Aspiration was to find out, if there is any influence between opposite sex parent characteristic and partner selection. Within the scope of this research, there was established relation between partner selection and mother dominance characteristic.