

Abstract (in English):

The diploma thesis characterizes shared custody in the Czech Republic. The thesis focuses on the influence of shared custody on the upbringing and education of a child in primary school. The thesis consists of theoretical and practical part. The theoretical part is divided into several subchapters. The subchapters focus on the characteristics of shared custody, such as the law on shared custody, the system in the Czech Republic and other forms of shared custody. The following subchapters focus on factors affecting shared custody such as age and gender. Another part of the theoretical part is the impact of shared custody on the upbringing and education of a child, at different developmental stages, from infancy to older school age. The second major section is the practical section, which is aimed at meeting the pre-determined objective. Thus, we find an in-depth interview with primary school staff and a questionnaire survey for class teachers. All this will be complemented by shared custody in practice.
