

Abstract

This thesis examines thematic-analytical practices related to the "Taiwan question," focusing on speeches, public appearances, concepts, and literature about the United States and the People's Republic of China. The work emphasizes key actors, their interests, strategies, and actions, as well as possible military plans and security concepts. The goal is to understand the role of "grand strategies" and other aspects in shaping the Taiwan issue. The thesis also focuses on American and Chinese foreign policy, analyzing the main leaders of both countries through thematic analysis and disciplined case study. Another part of the thesis examines the global positions of the United States and China and their military-political potential. Key strategies and visions that influence Taiwan's politics and security are described and reflected upon, with implications for the roles of the United States and China in the region.
