

Abstract

The work will focus on the research of short and long forms of passive participles in contemporary Czech based on corpus data. The aim will be the description of the material, the frequency of the forms in the written corpus SYN2020, their manual sorting and statistical evaluation.

The bachelor thesis is divided into theoretical and analytical parts. The theoretical part presents an overview of the literature on passive participles and demonstrates the development of passive participles from the beginning of the 20th century to the present. The practical part presents the analysis of corpus data, based on a comparison of long and short forms of passive participles and a comparison of action and resultative meanings of short forms of passive participles.

Key words
