Course of the examination: The student presented her bachelor's thesis, its main goals, motivation behind choosing of the topic and its main findings. She elaborated on the research design and the methodology, talking about the qualitative interviews done with university students in Prague and Rome. The committee presented the reviews of the supervisor and the opponent. The student responded to the the criticism of the opponent. She said that the questions for "solutions" was not in the scope of the thesis and is itself a symptom of modernity. She also stressed the need for decolonial theory within the university. The committee further criticized the apparent one-sidedness of the thesis. The committee also mentioned the missing appendix fo the interview data. The student responded that the thesis contains some of these data. The committee furhter asked why religion was not included as a subject in the interviews. The student said that she felt it was not important.
